There are several key factors, and price isn't necessarily the most important: if it were, every Hollywood movie would be made in Apple's free iMovie! Let's start at the end. What kind of video do you intend to make, and where is it for? There's a world of difference between quick editing of home videos you'll watch on TV and editing something for Netflix or cinema distribution. You'll need to consider what formats the software needs to export in, what level of quality it needs to output (HD? 4K? 8K?) and whether it can deliver the kind of visual effects you want to use. If you'll be collaborating, your app will need to be compatible with the other people's apps too. There's also you to consider. Are you experienced, or would a simpler app that takes you step by step through the whole process be more helpful? Do you want to have complete control over every pixel, or would you rather let the computer do most of the work? How future-proof do you need your app to be? #9. Magisto.
